It does not allow the company to profit from sales. For those unfamiliar with it, Dead Trigger is one of the app store's flagship shooters with interesting graphics. During the game, kill as many zombies as surviving the many waves. Madfinger wants to be rejected because this action is not a commercial or marketing practice, but has been dictated by countless dangerous practices of users. Therefore, the software was not free with the presence of additional in-app purchases to complete the experience. The status of the App Store is very different. The game will remain at the current price with optional in-app purchases. Although Apple users seem to spend money to proceed with the purchase legally, piracy also exists on iOS, but not at the same level as Android Reality.Others have complained, claiming that real anarchy dominates Google Play. For example, Sports Interactive has stated that sales of Football Manager 2012 for Android do not exist. They noted that there is a 9:1 ratio between downloaded and illegally purchased applications. For each version regularly purchased from the store, there are nine that have a free and illegal way. Despite everything, the situation regarding Trigger Dead seems unhappy with many iOS users. The hope is that the company, highly valued by the public, can somehow apologise to its games by offering the request for a free one-day offer.
